The Winnipeg General Strike
Recommended Reading List

The Winnipeg General Strike is Canada’s best-known general strike, lasting from May 15 to June 25 1919. At its peak over 30,000 strikers were involved including factory, retail trade and public sector employees. Elevators shut down, trams stopped, postal and telephone communications came to a halt - nothing moved without approval from the labour-led Strike Committee. At the heart of workers’ demands was the right to collective bargaining, better wages and working conditions.

On June 21, Bloody Saturday, the Mounties charged a crowd of 30,000 strikers who had assembled to demonstrate on Market Square. Two strikers died and dozens were injured. The strikers returned to work on June 25. The General Strike’s effect was felt for decades. The right to collective bargaining would be recognized in all of Canada by the end of the Second World War.
